OF PAVEMENTS TOOLS FOR REPAIR OF PAVEMENTS The most important part of a repaving operation is the preparation of the slab. Although a competent grader can prepare the base, concrete for paving must be carefully and skillfully graded, troweled, finished and compressed to maintain its integrity. A slurry is used to finish the last of the troweled surfaces. In the installation of new pavement, care must be exercised in keeping the traffic flow evenly distributed on the newly laid concrete, but in repair work, a more rigid paving procedure is necessary. It is important to have the flexibility to change the width of the ribbing and to adjust the width of the traffic area as traffic patterns change or to permit widening of the median area.

Depending on the requirement for large or small traffic areas, the slab can be cut to accommodate these areas or they can be left intact. If the slab is to be removed, all the concrete must be removed at the same time.

All concrete must be protected from hard water, penetrating ground and the deleterious action of the elements. All concrete can be protected from the elements by protection provided by stucco or appropriate type concrete. Tools In the repair of pavements, the required repairs can be made by various tools. Hand tools are suitable for small repairs and include trowels, picks, shovels, rakes and brooms. Graders, runners and hammers are used for larger operations. When a ribbon is to be replaced, it is cleaned of existing ribbing, the root material of the ribbon and the base material is removed. A push line is used in the ribbing removal and the ribbing is cut at the desired joint. The joint is then spread with a tamping iron. The ribbing is laid out on the concrete with the ribbing trowel. The ribbing has to be hand troweled. The ribbing or joint must be clean. The first trowel should be broad with a small trowel over it. If the ribbon is designed to carry the traffic,
